Help your children blossom

Heemal H Bhat, Principal of Hansraj Model School, Punjabi Bagh, in her address to parents, shares the latest thoughts about raising happy and healthy kids

Parenting has undergone a metamorphosis since the last decade. Parenting has assumed new dimensions viz-a-viz the changes in society, advent of technology and a sea change in the thinking process. Parents' role has thus dramatically changed from being authoritarian, who were demanding disciplinarians, to becoming understanding, sympathetic and friendly companions. They have to reinvent themselves into a new mould in sync with the changing psychological and emotional needs of the child.

Every school's foundation should stand firm on the trilogy of teachers-parents-students. Regular PTMs, open house meetings, counselling and interactive sessions, inviting professional parents for career guidance, etc are some of the ways for continuous parental involvement. It would not be wrong to say that today, parenting is an uphill task. It is indeed an imperative to cope with academics, sports, extra-curricular and many other interests assigned to their children. Children today are themselves trying to cope with peer pressure, performance pressure, pressure of competition and other challenges.

Parenting needs to be customised according to the need of the hour. Parents have to be a friend now, a counsellor the next minute, a know-all answer key to every question, a provider, a supporter, a motivator and so on and so forth. Remember there is no such thing as a "perfect parent". Just be your best and remember that these moments will never come back.

In case of children who do not have parental support, when it comes to pursuing a particular area of study, the school must provide unconditional support to children and take a step further in counselling parents to let them pursue their child's passions and dreams. A galaxy of star achievers in all fields amongst the alumni can visit as role models, motivating young minds and hand holding them in their professional journeys.
